We had a terrific team of mostly veterans this year that were able to cover much of the better habitat in the county on this year's count, held May 12. Despite the good coverage and decent weather, nearly everyone commented on the extremely low numbers of migrants (in marked contrast to last year's count). Considering the shocking scarcity of migrant warblers and flycatchers (only two Empids were reported on the entire count, both unidentified), we were lucky to tally as many as we did—129 species, compared to last year's 133.

The rarest bird seen was unquestionably the Yellow-crowned Night-Heron in the shallows of the Rio Grande at Leasburg Dam State Park, first found and photographed by CJ Goin two days earlier and ticked off by Marcy at first light! Next in rarity was the Rose-breasted Grosbeak found and hastily photographed by Gill Sorg at Fillmore Canyon. Also noteworthy were Harris's Hawk, Broad-tailed Hummingbird (1 low-elevation bird in Radium Springs), and Horned Lark. Other good finds included Wood Duck, Neotropic Cormorant, Sora, Black-necked Stilt, American Avocet, Solitary Sandpiper, Common Nighthawk, Olive-sided Flycatcher, Cassin's Kingbird, Gray Vireo, Cedar Waxwing, Lazuli Bunting, and Indigo Bunting. Notable misses this year, other than the warblers and flycatchers (especially considering the habitats covered), were Pied-billed Grebe, any accipiters, Acorn Woodpecker (a usual breeder in the Organ Mtns.), Hutton's Vireo (ditto), Western Scrub-Jay (ditto), Mountain Chickadee (ditto), Black-tailed Gnatcatcher, Hermit Thrush, and Painted Bunting (several known local breeding sites have been destroyed or compromised in the past few years).
